VENUE:
Hokkaido University

PARTICIPANTS:
Students:
-Leading Program students from Hokkaido University.
-Five 2nd year Leading Program students from Nagasaki University.

Facilitating professors:
-Prof. Motohiro Horiuchi
-Prof. Osamu Kaneko

Leading Program students of Hokkaido University and Nagasaki University participated in the 31st Leading Progress Seminar in Hokkaido University. Before the seminar, the host Hokkaido University gave a tour of the graduate school of Veterinary Medicine to Nagasaki University students. Representatives from each university introduced their Program and shared experiences each other.

During the seminar, two students from Hokkaido University and four students from Nagasaki University introduced their research topics highlighting the important role of research about human health-environment and zoonotics diseases. The participants have interests in common in infectious diseases and leadership. Research collaboration & cooperative support are necessary for us.

A farewell party was very friendly and warm even though the weather outside was freezing. Students communicated well and completely got lost in time.

We appreciate the support from both universities for this activity. This was a memorable seminar and we hope it initiated future exchanges between the Leading Program students of both universities
